MUSEUMSMILE

'A big smile' for a small mile

There is a surprising number of museums and art centres in Luxembourg's small capital. Linked up as points on a map of the city, they cover a distance of slightly less than a full mile, and string out nicely in a smile-like arc over the uneven topography. Luckily, visiting these seven cultural institutions is easy because of the short distance between them. However, it is their variety and the uniqueness of each one that constitute the real attraction enticing visitors to come and see them.

Five of the institutions are located in the city centre, all within walking distance of each other. Visitors can enjoy ancient masterpieces of painting at the Villa Vauban, a 19th century bourgeois building comprising a contemporary extension and located at the heart of the city park. A discovery of the country's archaeological and historical heritage beckons on the former fish market, at the National Museum of History and Art, along with the State art collections ranging from the 15th century to the present day. Practically around the corner, the Lëtzebuerg City Museum is waiting to be explored, and at Casino Luxembourg, visitors may get acquainted with the latest trends of the international art scene. From here, the path leads down into the valley (by elevator), where you may experience the refreshing perspective that the National History Museum offers on natural history, evolution and biodiversity.

A 15-minute walk up the steep, wooded slopes of Kirchberg, or just a short bus ride away, the recently planted Park Dräi Eechelen cradles two museums right next to each other. On one side, the Musée Dräi Eechelen documents the World Heritage site of Luxembourg's fortifications; on the other, the Musée d'Art Moderne Grand-Duc Jean hosts a contemporary art collection and temporary exhibitions. The walking paths, cycle paths and bus routes relaxingly lead visitors from one museum to the next, passing numerous galleries, boutiques, restaurants and cafés, and offering excellent scenic views. In the present brochure, the 'd'stater muséeën' association provides a short description of each museum and art centre as well as several options to progress easily along the 'museum(s)mile'. Experience culture the Luxembourg way and smile!

This 19th-century bourgeois mansion with a modern extension is located in the heart of the city, in the relaxing setting of an old park. The exhibitions hosted by Villa Vauban present the collections of the City of Luxembourg, made up largely of 17th-century Dutch artworks and 19th-century French history paintings and landscapes. The museum varies its exhibition formats, enabling the works to be explored from different angles. High-profile temporary exhibitions feature loans from major international collections. A varied programme of activities awaits the visitor.

Ideally located in the heart of the capital, the Casino Luxembourg – Forum d'art contemporain holds contemporary art exhibitions with an international programme of mainly younger-generation artists. The art centre houses public spaces with a variety of uses and vocations, combining contemporary art with a warm and friendly meeting place: the ground floor, next to a library specialising in contemporary art, has a "BlackBox" projection room devoted to artists' videos; an area dedicated to learning activities, and a café-restaurant, the ca(fé)sino. The first floor is exclusively used for temporary exhibitions, so artists' monographs and themed exhibitions are shown here.

In its central building inaugurated in 2002 and three ancient town houses renovated in 2015, the National Museum of History and Art offers more than 6000m² of exhibition space dedicated to archaeological, historical and art collections. The ensemble is the go-to attraction for anyone wishing to become familiar with Luxembourg's cultural heritage through its public collections. The museum's entrance section functions in the way of a prologue, giving a short history of both the country and the museum, at the end of which the visitor will find it easy to plot his favoured itinerary. There are four suggested tours: Territorial Archaeology from prehistoric times to the Middle Ages; Luxembourgish and international painting and sculpture from the 14th century to this day; Luxembourg life from the 16th century until today; and finally a history of money from Antiquity to the present day. Besides its newly reorganized permanent displays, which brilliantly showcase the feathers in its cap, the museum hosts temporary exhibitions that resonate in context with its collections. In the Wiltheim wing, a separate room is dedicated to the work of famous Luxembourg-born American photographer Edward Steichen.

A Fancy for Science

Visitors come to the ‘natur musée’ because they are interested in natural history and natural sciences in general, or because the issues raised in the permanent and temporary exhibits are exceptional, instructive, sometimes surprisingly uncommon and always deserve the mention. The museum shows in a simple, understandable and exciting way what natural history is: the discovery of Nature's diversity in connection with a love of science.

The National Museum of Natural History: also a research institute

Behind the exhibitions of the museum lies in fact a world of scientists studying the collection of millions of specimens and committing themselves to the exploration of the natural heritage. The National Museum of Natural History has the largest natural history collections in the country. Many hours of field work, extensive laboratory studies and an accurate determination is needed before only the most remarkable specimens find their way into the exhibitions or collections of the museum.

New permanent exhibitions

In 2017 completely redesigned permanent exhibitions re-opened to the public on more than 1000 m². The fact that the new museological concept reflects the current state of scientific research and that the rich collections of the museum appear in a new light enables the visitor to develop a perspective on the subject of natural history.

Temporary exhibitions

18.04 - 27.08.2018

- (Un) expected treasures. Within the framework of the European Year of Cultural Heritage 2018, the national cultural institutes present unique collection objects in the common „(Un) expected Treasures“ exhibition at the ‘natur musée’.

07.06 - 29.07.2018

- Rock Fossils. The secret love between paleontology and rock music

12.10.2018 - 06.01.2019

- Michael Benson's Otherworlds. Otherworlds will explore the beauty of our solar system and demonstrate that the visual legacy of six decades of space exploration constitutes a visually stunning, important chapter in the history of photography. Created by artist, curator and writer Michael Benson, the 70 images on display represent a joining together of art and science.

An exceptional historic landmark, the restored remains of Fort Thüngen, built in 1732-33, hosts the Musée Dräi Eechelen dedicated to the Fortress, History and Identities since 2012. In the permanent exhibition, each casemate documents a period in the history of the fortress, highlighting links to the general history of the city. The itinerary starts in the Middle Ages with the invasion by the Burgundians in 1443 and ends with the construction of the Adolphe Bridge in 1903. Around 600 objects and original documents, many of them previously unseen, testify to the richness of the collections. A specifically fitted out area hosts photographs that show the fortress just before and during its demolition. The building itself features as the main exhibit, comprising a spectacular network of underground tunnels which remain in a state similar to its last modification (1836-37). A multimedia space gives access to an interactive data base as well as audio-visual documentation relating to the museum's topical areas. Free Audio guides in German, English, French and Luxembourgish give detailed information regarding a selection of objects. The museum's auditorium regularly hosts talks and video projections in the context of its collection, while the first floor is dedicated to temporary exhibitions.

Inaugurated in 2006, Mudam Luxembourg celebrates the most varied and most recent forms of artistic creation. Looking to the future, it explores various aesthetic and geographic horizons; its collection and programme prospects new trends in visual arts on a national and international scale. Designed by the Sino-American architect Ieoh Ming Pei, the building is a marvelous dialogue between the natural and historical environments. Standing against the vestiges of Fort Thüngen, it is rooted within the Park Dräi Eechelen, at the entrance to the Plateau du Kirchberg, close to the European district and the Philharmonie Luxembourg.
